On November 13, 2021, Shine City Project once again helped out at Wetlands Park! Our Shine City Project volunteers joined others in helping to put in native plants in an area of the nature preserve. A couple of the plants that we planted were desert globemallow, a flowering shrub that is common in the Mojave desert, and Saltgrass, a grass that grows in salty soil conditions at Wetlands Park.

After removing the plants from their pots and putting them into their respective holes, we placed wire cages around the plants to help prevent animals such as rabbits from eating them. This will help ensure their growth and survival. Overall, though our team of five volunteers was small, we got our hands dirty to help make a big impact until the very end!
