Santiago de los Caballeros, Dominican Republic

Hola, all! GPA Dominican Republic has had a great week since our last post, so I'm pretty stoked to share with you all what we've been up to!

We started off this week by traveling down to Santiago, another major city within the DR. We spent our first day within the city sightseeing by visiting a beautiful monument overlooking the city and exploring the bustling streets of Santiago. While both Santiago and Santo Domingo are both within a smaller country, Santiago has a unique spirit; street walls covered in paintings and tasteful graffiti as well as people who seem to take their time doing whatever they're doing contributes to a more relaxed atmosphere.

Then we moved on to witnessing! This time around, we didn't just stick to college campuses, but we also approached people in streets and shops who had a second to tell them about another cultural event GPA organized. This event had a greater focus on the culture of the U.S. as well as an excellent DP lecture given by Carlos (insert title and last name). A lot of invited guests were pretty receptive to the given content, and the discussions we had afterwards were both educational and inspiring.
