Those who pursue a career in journalism often do so because they believe their work contributes to the betterment of society. The same could be said of those who join spiritual or religious communities. However, research shows that media representation of religious communities is often negative, or worse – derisive. What are the implications of religious representation in the media, both culturally and politically, and why does it matter for your religious freedom?

Join us on this rebroadcast of a very popular IMAP webinar as Professor Joel Campbell from the BYU School of Communications, Mr. Bobby Ross, junior editor of the Christian Chronicle, and Ms. Nancy Jubb, media spokesperson for the Family Federation for World Peace and Unification, explore this important issue.
