

"Science and Religion. Two roads in search of the truth"

Barcelona, Spain, 20. October 2013

Emilio Asti delivered the lecture "Science and Religion. Two roads in search of the truth", connecting science to knowledge and learning, and religion to rebind.

In his presentation he explained that science as an external search, out of man, in his environment is dynamic and it has been outside, connecting man with the physical reality of the environment he lives in , and has been deepening the knowledge of the energies that are beyond our physical senses .

Religion as internal search, develops in the field of morality, inspiration, teaches how to drive a dignified and honest life, has an ethical and moral sense, but it has remained static and generated dogmas.

Both science and religion seek the welfare of humanity; both relate to the realities of the human being therefore science is more in touch with the physical self and religion with the spiritual self.

Some scientists recognize that every existing being cannot exist only by chance and therefore consider the possibility of a superior mind, and it should walk for the welfare of humanity breaking free of individualistic interests.

The universe demands to be understood rather than interpreted not only by the intellect but also by the heart.

The guests like this lecture because the speaker Emilio, knows how to emphasize the important points of the matter and awake the curiosity. The lecture was very dynamic and familiar
