

WFWP UK: WFWP International Women's Day Conference

Mitty Tohma
March 26, 2022

Women's Federation for World Peace (WFWP) United Kingdom hosted the International Women's Day conference on March 26, 2022, which is a part of the WFWP program that encourages women to take part in the development of their leadership skills and to rethink sustainability in times of change. It was created to inspire and support women and their social presence in the process of transformation of young women's lives and to drive them to pursue their leadership further in the public eye.

In collaboration with the Albanian society that is a part of the Student Union at the University of Westminster, the conference took place in the space of the University, hosting our first International Women's Day Conference.

The conference experience involved a panel of inspirational VIP speakers, such as: Fredrick Clark, Remzije Duli, Lynette Nabbosa and Luljeta Nuzi who shared their programs, ideas and experiences that included leadership roles in the making. The conference concluded with capacity-building workshops that explored the ideas of leadership, empathy, wellbeing, and mental health to inspire and support the newcomers and share our common purpose goals.

