Visiting Theater as New Way of Communication

Moscow CARP started a new project "Cultural outing". On December 7th we've visited Taganka Theater together with our guests and some second generation children.

The evening was interesting and full of events. It was great to discover a new environment. We were able to communicate with guests before the spectacle and to know how they are doing.

During the intermission, a small tea break was organized and we discussed the ambiguity of the performance of Shakespeare's classics "Coriolanus". The spectacle was played in a modern style, and our impressions and conclusions were quite different, however, we tried to help our guests to see everything from the God's and Principle point of view.

The main conclusion was that the platform of cultural joint outings is very promising, in this format it is also important to discuss the Principle from different sides. Everyone was happy that we met and spent time together - this is very important.

In the nearest plans within the project - visiting various temples, denominations, there was an offer to visit the Museum of Jewish Culture.

The goal is to prepare for the winter program in St. Petersburg "Following the tracks of religions." And supporting the vision of "One Family Under God".
